OPENING UP THE SPACE SECTOR

Dr. B R Guruprasad

The Union Cabinet on June 24 approved significant reforms in the country's space sector. This is in line with the long-term vision of the Prime Minister Narendra Modi to transform India and make the country self-reliant and technologically advanced 'Amritabhar Shakti', which he spelt out during his address to the nation on May 12, 2020. These reforms will boost private sector participation in the country's space programme. It will receive new energy and dynamism to help the country leapfrog to the next stages of space activities. It is hoped that these reforms will make space-based applications and services more widely accessible to everyone in the country.

Historic Decision

The first indication of this historic initiative on structural reforms had actually come more than a month earlier on May 16 when the Union Finance Minister Nirmala Sitharaman announced that eight key sectors of the economy including coal production and exploration, defence production, space and atomic energy would see an increased participation from private entities.

The Finance Minister said, the Indian private sector would be a co-traveler in India's space journey. As per the new government initiative, the private sector would be allowed to use Indian Space Research Organisation (ISRO) facilities and other assets to improve their capacities.

More importantly, the Minister had assured that the government would provide a predictable policy and regulatory environment to private players. It was also disclosed that future projects for planetary exploration and outer space travel would be opened up for private entities. Till now, ISRO, which is a government organisation, had exclusively laid, planned and conducted the country's activities concerning space exploration and satellite launches.

This important initiative of the government to bring in structural reforms is revolutionary indeed and it principally aims to significantly enhance private sector participation in the entire range of the country's space activities. This decision would not only result in an accelerated growth of space sector but will enable Indian industry to become an important player in the global space economy as well. It emphasised that this decision would open up an opportunity for large-scale employment in the technology sector besides making India a global technology powerhouse.

In the past, the space sector has played a major catalytic role in the country's technological advancement, at the same time facilitating the expansion of our industrial base. It is hoped that the proposed reforms would further enhance the socio-economic use of space assets like satellites and activities like satellite building and the utilisation of satellites for such important tasks like communications, earth observation and navigation.

IN-SPACE: The Facilitator

Dr. Ujitwar Singh, Minister of State in the Prime Minister's Office heading the Department of Space functions, announced on June 24 that for effectively implementing these reforms, the government has recently created Indian National Space Promotion and Authori-

CAREER AS A BANK PROBATIONARY OFFICER

Vijay Prakash Srivastava

A few months ago lockdown was announced in the country to arrest the spread of Corona Virus. Most of the economic activities came to a halt and closures remain closed. Factories were shut and educational institutes had also to face closure. However banks and their branches were kept open. Even when most of the operations were closed, the government wanted banks to carry on with most of the services offered by them. Many people from lower income group collected the government financial aid credited to their accounts, by visiting these bank branches. Through this example it is easy to understand how important banks are for a country and its economy.

After implementation of Jan Dhan Yojana in the year 2014, many people in the country now have access to banks and banking services. Also in the past few decades banks have made significant contribution in employment generation. On one side a large number of young people have joined banks as employees, on the other jobs have been created by the units (small, medium or big) financed by banks.

A large segment of our youth, aspire for a banking career. A job in a public sector bank (PSB) offers security, growth opportunity and serve people. Probationary officer is a coveted entry level position in these banks and the career path it offers is full of opportunities, challenges and growth. The career path also provides richness of experience. Probationary means new to a job or activity, to newly recruited junior officers in PSBs are called probationary officers. In Punjab National Bank, such new officers are known as Management Trainees.

The entry bar for a generalist probationary officer in banks has been kept simple. With a graduate qualification in any subject, one may apply for the position. Since bulk recruitments are made by combining the vacancies in all PSBs, the chances of selection are better, notwithstanding the competition due to large number of applicants. To understand this, compare applying for 5 positions with 1000 positions.

Selection process and test pattern for recruitment of probationary officers have already been explained in earlier articles published in Employment News. This article is an attempt to provide an idea of the career path of a bank probationary officer after joining a bank.

Sequencer: A number of mergers have taken place in government and private banks space. After the latest such instance, now there are 12 PSBs in the country with nearly 87,000 branches. These branches are spread all over the country and cater to every population segment (urban, semi-urban and rural). Few banks have branches abroad as well.

When you select as a probationary officer the entire country becomes your work territory. You may be posted in any part of the country, though in the beginning, candidates subject to requirements of the bank concerned, may be offered postings in the area of their choice.

ation Centre (IN-SPACE) to provide a "level field for private companies to use Indian space infrastructure. The government wants to give a level playing field to all private players. Dr Singh also added that another important function of IN-SPACE is to develop, promote and guide private industries in space activities through encouraging policies and a friendly regulatory environment.
As the facilitating entity, IN-SPACE will work on the mechanism for ISRO’s engagement with private industries to meet their demands in the country’s space programme. It will also assess the needs and demands of private players besides exploring ways to accommodate these requirements in consultation with ISRO. This new autonomous body will also broadly lay the road for private companies to take up research and development of space missions including rockets and satellites.
As part of the reforms, existing ground and space-based infrastructure of ISRO, especially scientific and technical resources and data are planned to be made accessible to interested parties to enable them to carry out their space-related activities. Thus, provision of Government’s careful support and encouragement to space industries during this crucial period of change looks secure.
A day after the cabinet approval of structural reforms, Dr K Sivan, Chairman of ISRO, welcomed the Government’s decision and felt that it would put India in the new league. Dr Sivan added that Department of Space would promote private sector space activities to enable it to provide end-to-end space services, including building and launching of rockets and satellites, as well as providing space-based services on a commercial basis.
The Rationale
Dr Sivan said, India is amongst a handful of countries with advanced space technology. Space sector could play a significant role in boosting the industrial base of India. The government had decided to implement reforms to leverage ISRO’s achievement by opening space sector for private enterprises. As part of larger socio-economic reforms, space reforms would improve access to space-based services for India’s development. He underscored the importance of these far-reaching reforms and said they would put India in a league of few space-faring countries with efficient promotional and authorisation mechanism for private sector space activities.
Additionally, the demand for space-based applications and services was growing with in India, and ISRO was unable to cater to this. The need for satellite data, imageries and space technology is felt essential in various domains, from agriculture to weather forecasting to urban and transportation. This rising demand required immense expansion of ISRO.
There are a few companies in the process of developing their own launch vehicles that carry the satellites and other payloads into space. This would likely help. Right now, all launches from India happen on ISRO’s launch vehicles like PSLV and GSLV. ISRO was ready to provide its facilities to private players whose projects had been approved by IN-SPACE.
Thus, ISRO will function as a facilitator and also a regulator. It will act as an interface between ISRO and private parties, and will assess as how best to utilise India’s space resources and increase space-based activities. There are sound commercial reasons for providing importance to the private involvement in the space sector.
The ISRO chairman also said space-based economy would significantly expand in the coming years globally as well as in India thereby benefiting private players as well as ISRO. Besides, ISRO would get revenues by making its facilities and data available to private industry.
Another reason is that the private industry will also free up ISRO to concentrate on science, research and development, interplanetary exploration and strategic studies. As of now, much of ISRO’s resources are utilised for routine activities and this is said to delay its more strategic objectives. Thus, there is no reason as to why ISRO alone should conduct routine launch of operational satellites like communication, weather and navigation satellites, the Government feels.
Globaly, an increasing number of private players are taking over this activity for commercial benefits. ISRO is principally a scientific organisation whose main objective is exploration of space. In this regard, a number of promising space missions are in various stages of progress, including Aditya Mission to observe the Sun, Chandrayaan-3 Mission to the Moon, India’s human spaceflight programme Gaganyaan, India as a Space power
India is considered as a major space nation today along with the United States of America, Russia, China, Japan and Europe. During its six decade long space endeavour, India has acquired the end-to-end capability to design, develop, build, test, and more recently, launch satellites to cater to various applications and services as well as to manage them in orbit and utilise them for various essential tasks. Today, indigenous built and launched satellites are an integral part of our national infrastructure.
Besides, over the past two decades, the country has been making progress in providing space-based services globally. These include launch of satellites, building of satellites for international customers, leasing of communication transponders and provision of remote sensing services. Today, ISRO has successfully launched a 107 customer satellites and three of its own satellites (totaling a whopping 104 satellites) in a single launch of its workhorse launch vehicle PSLV in February 2017 enabled India to achieve world record.
Globaly, private companies providing a variety of services like satellite building and launching have played a major role in the space programmes of the United States, Europe and Japan. The recent successful launch of Crew Dragon by SpaceX with two NASA astronauts on May 31, 2020 (as per Indian Standard Time) signifies the beginning of a new era in space exploration since the Crew Dragon capsule was both built and launched by the private American company SpaceX. This was the first time such a development had occurred in the domain of human spaceflight and underscored the enhanced role of private sector in the American space programme.
Thus, the participation of domestic industry in the Indian space programme has progressively been enhanced. Today, a large part of rocket manufacturing and fabrication of Indian rockets and satellites now operates in the private sector. The role of research institutions in the country in the Indian space programme is also important in the past and is on the increase. Realising the needs of NSIL
In May 2016, the Government created New Space India Limited (NSIL) to commercially exploit the products and services emanating from the country’s space programme. Thus, NSIL came up as an assisting body to ISRO to facilitate private participation in its programmes. As part of the recent reforms, the government intends to direct NSIL, a Public Sector Enterprise, to promote space activities from a ‘supply driven’ model to a ‘demand driven’ model. The role of NSIL would now give importance to the needs of clients and concentrates on fulfilling those through ISRO rather than marketing ISRO’s offer, as it did in the past. In the government’s opinion, this would ensure optimum utilization of the country’s space assets.
ISRO chairman Dr Sivan said, Indian industry had a barely three per cent share in a rapidly growing global space economy which was already worth at least $350 billion. Only two per cent of this market was for rocket and satellite launch services, which require fairly large infrastructure and heavy capital investments, and remaining 98 per cent related to satellite-based services, and ground-based systems.
Resolve action to further exploit space capabilities
In this context, by instituting major reforms without much delay to reorganise the country’s space sector, the government has begun adapting to the unfolding changes in the global space business. By giving up its dominant role in the space sector, the government has quickly moved towards the new model of India’s space activity after being aware of the role of private sector today and efforts of other space faring nations. This would facilitate a regulatory environment that would promote a more dynamic role for the private sector and promotes innovation.
With the timely implementation of the recently announced reforms in the country’s space sector in earnest, there can be optimism on private players getting equal opportunity and entering the domain of space with new energy and dynamism to undertake the challenging space endeavours. This will certainly help the country to vouch to the next stage of space activities and scale much greater heights in the realm of space.

After your joining as probationary officer, you remain on probation for a defined period. Earlier the probation period used to be two years which has now been reduced to one year by most of the banks. After successful completion of the probation the employee gets confirmed in service. Now many facilities, which earlier were extended to confirmed officers only, are available since beginning of employment i.e. probation. A probationary officer belongs to Junior Management Grade Scale I, many times known as Assistant Manager. After Junior Management, the next levels are Middle Management, Senior Management and Top Executive Grade. There are seven levels of officers in PSBs- Assistant Manager, Senior Manager, Chief Manager, Assistant General Manager, Deputy General Manager and General Manager. Few banks have created the positions of Chief General Manager also which comes after General Manager. Executive Director and Chairman & Managing Director are Board level positions, appointments to which are made by government.

Skill building through Training: Every progressive organization gives lot of importance to train its employees. The training system is very strong in PSBs, which caters to different levels of employees. All probationary officers are given induction training at their bank's training centre to apprise them of bank's culture, organizational set up, policies, service regulations as well as banking law and practice, along with overview of banking products and services. The training also covers management and soft skills and most importantly the operational system as we all know most of the banking happens on computers. This induction training can be in phases. Being posted at a bank branch, probationary officers receive on the job training and are rotated through all basic banking functions like deposits, loans, cash management etc. Branches are the main operating units of banks and it is considered necessary for officers to get exposed to all important functions in branch banking. Some part of the training may also happen at an administrative office of the bank. The training in administrative offices is brief and is intended to give knowledge of control mechanism and compliance regulations to be followed by banks. E learning is also available for them. Training policy and duration may differ from bank to bank.

From time to time officers are nominated to receive training in different areas conducted by bank itself or by other institutions.

Placements: In all likelihood when you join a bank as probationary officer, after induction training, you'll be posted in a branch. More than half of bank branches in the country are in rural and semi urban areas. Your work responsibilities will depend on the size of the branch you're put into. For example if you work in a small branch, you may be asked to look after the entire deposit portfolio of the branch, whereas in a big branch you'll be attending to only one segment, current/ savings/ fixed/other deposits. A bank officer may have to work as in-charge of one or more particular business segment. Within two-three years you may be considered for the role of manager of a small branch. As you progress to higher grades you'll be posted as section in-charge or work as manager of a bigger branch.

In comparison to branches, banks have lesser number of administrative offices. Those posted at administrative offices will work in a particular department of this office, initially as an assistant officer. When you grow a bit senior, you may hold the position of functional head in such an office. These functions include operations management, planning, business development/ marketing, HR, compliance, customer service, information technology etc.

As Deputy General Manager you may be made a Zonal Head for a large number (may be 60 to 100) branches. General Managers mostly work from corporate offices.

Areas of work: Many of us would have gone to a bank branch to open a savings account or to deposit a cheque. It should not make us conclude that banking is limited to these few tasks only. The truth is banking business has a lot of variety. If we take the deposit segment, banks have schemes for savings, current, recurring, term and foreign currency deposit schemes with multiple variants. The canvas of loan segment is also large consisting of loans to agriculture, micro, small and medium enterprises, corporates and infrastructure financing. Retail loans can be divided into housing loan, education loan, holiday loan, loan for purchase of consumer durables, loan against property and other personal loans. Foreign exchange and treasury is also a business segment for them. Now banks are dealing in credit cards in a big way. Various third party products like insurance, mutual funds can also be purchased from banks.

Specialist probationary officers: What is discussed above relates to officers for general banking stream. Probationary specialist officers are also recruited in banks on a regular basis. They work in the area of their specialization. Applicants for some specialist positions, in addition to graduation, need to have additional required qualification. For some, being graduate in the specialized area meets the initial requirement. Most common specialist positions in banks are listed below:

- Agricultural officer
- Marketing officer
- Law officer
- Personnel/Human Resource officer
- Hindi officer
- Technical officer
- Risk management officer
- Computer/Information technology officer
- Information security officer
- Security officer
- Economist
- Statistician
- Chartered Accountant

Newly appointed officers are made to undergo a basic training in all the areas. They have to undergo all such training and are familiarized with all the aspects of the bank. They are also made to undergo a training in personal management and public relations. They are also made to undergo a training in corporate law and corporate governance. They are also made to undergo a training in the functioning of the Reserve Bank of India and other regulatory bodies.

Those who possess specialised qualifications and have joined as general banking officers, may be provided an opportunity to work in that specialized area.

Opportunities for growth/promotion: In recent years banks have offered many relaxations in their promotion policies and now promotions happen at much shorter duration. A decade ago it used to take minimum seven years to reach middle management from junior management. Now it is possible to get such promotion in two years. Every bank has its own promotion policy according to which promotions are conducted on regular basis. In most banks promotions are an annual exercise. Officers after completing a certain number of years in a particular scale may apply for promotion to next scale. For promotion up to senior management level written test is conducted. Promotion is based on marks obtained in written test, interview/group discussion and appraisal of past performance. For promotion up to certain scales additional weightage is given for qualifications like MBA, CA, CAsIIB/CAIIB among others. CAIIB and CAIIB are conducted by Indian Institute of Banking and Finance, country's premier institute for banking knowledge. Almost all I those who are now positioned as Chairmen and Executive Directors in different banks began their career as junior officers and few even as clerks. As banks expand, promotional opportunities will also increase.

Lateral entry opportunities: Sometimes banks decide to take experienced people in higher scales. This gives a chance to get a quick jump. At times this channel is also used to move to a preferred location or to a bigger bank or to some other financial organization.

Other opportunities: Many of the public sector banks have branches abroad. Joining such banks may provide you opportunity to get international exposure, as bright officers from within the bank are sent to work in and manage these foreign branches. One such tenure is of three to four years. Few banks have schemes for sending officers for training at foreign branches for a brief period which may be a year or less. A number of banks have subsidiaries to which officers from parent bank are deputed for a certain period. Organizations like Central Bureau of Investigation, also require bank officers on deputation. Those interested in teaching and knowledge sharing, after prescribed years of work experience, may opt to become a trainer/faculty member at a training establishment of the bank. At senior levels one may work as principal of the training college.

Service conditions: Salary structure of officers in PSBs is based on negotiations between Indian Banks Association and officers' association bodies, to which central government has to provide its approval. Dearness allowance on basic salary is revised every three months. Increments are offered on annual basis. Benefits to officers include housing facility/subsidy, canteen subsidy leave travel concession, reimbursement for newspaper, petrol, cleaning material, higher interest rate on deposits etc. Such facilities and their limits vary from bank to bank. Branch managers may be given additional facilities.

Officers are liable to be transferred to any branch or office of the bank, however such transfers have to be in accordance with the policy. Usually transfers of officers happen every three to four years. For all administrative transfers, banks bear the travel, transportation and incidental costs as per rules.

Public sector banks offer adequate job security as long as you work with complete honesty, integrity and dedication.

President Vladimir Putin has won a resounding victory in his bid to stay in power until the middle of the next decade, as the survey has overwhelmingly endorsed the country’s political status quo. Russian cast ballots in a nationwide referendum on constitutional amendments. The vote paves the way for Putin, who has ruled for two decades, to remain President until 2036. The results are reminiscent of the 2018 Presidential Election, when Putin won re-election in a landslide with three-quarters of ballots cast.

US President Donald Trump has blamed Chinese aggression for the stand-off along the India-China border. Quoting Mr Trump, White House press secretary Kayleigh McEnany said, China’s aggressive stance along the India-China border fits with a larger pattern of Chinese aggression in other parts of the world. She said, these actions only confirm the true nature of the Chinese Communist Party. Mr Trump’s remarks come in the backdrop of Chinese actions both internally as well as across the Asia geopolitical theatre in the past few months. In the past two months, China has passed a repressive national security legislation regarding Hong Kong, easing its autonomy. Beijing has also stepped up its offensive in the South China Sea against countries such as Vietnam. The White House statement reflected a snapper position that had been evolving in the US administration, especially by secretary of state Mike Pompeo.
